4 Facts About Community Schools and Funding

Community schools (also referred to as full-service community schools) are increasingly recognized as a valuable strategy to improve educational outcomes for underserved students. There are about 8,000-10,000 community schools in more than 100 districts and cities in the United States. Implementation of the community school strategy benefits from blending and braiding public and private funding sources.

1. Community schools are funded mostly through public sources (e.g., federal, state, district, and municipal agencies) but private sources are also important (e.g., businesses, nonprofit organizations, and local and national foundations).

2010 report indicates that 72% of community school funding is from public sources and 28% is from private sources

Source: Blank, M., Jacobson, R., Melaville, A., & Pearson, S. (2010). Financing Community Schools: Leveraging Resources to Support Student Success. Coalition for Community Schools, Institute for Educational Leadership.

3.

Backbone organizations such as United Way, Children's Aid, and Communities in Schools assist some districts with mobilizing and coordinating community school funding. 2. $3B

State investment in community schools is increasing and ranges from $3 million to $3 billion; these allocations are authorized through state legislation and generally administered through competitive grants.

Title II, Part A

Title III, Part B

Title III, Part A

Title IV, Part A, B, and F

Title IX, Part A

Federal monies from at least 5 Title funds (totaling an estimated $18B annually) can be used to implement and sustain community school programs and services. Additional federal funding sources include Medicaid and food/nutrition programs, among others.

